CHOOSING MAGNIFIERS

HOW TO CHOOSE A MAGNIFIER

Many factors are required in determining the proper magnifier:

- Which one will most suit your requirements?
- Which one is the easiest for you to see with?
- Which one is the easiest for you to use?
- What task are you attempting to accomplish with the magnifier?

It is not uncommon to need several different power/types of magnifiers. The proper magnifiers can help to maintain independence and see better.

"Bigger is Better" does not apply when it comes to magnification!

WHY? The largest magnifier is not the most powerful. The power (amount of magnification) of a lens governs its size. The stronger the magnification the smaller the lens size becomes.

It is impossible to make a high-powered magnifier which covers a large area. (Though electronic devices can accomplish this.)

WHY? The power of a lens is determined by the curvature of the lens. The curved surface bends the light rays to produce an image that appears larger. The more curved a lens is, the smaller it becomes. Physically the lens becomes thicker and heavier as the curve (magnification) increases.

CHOOSING MAGNIFIERS

A stronger power magnifier (steeper curve) requires you to position the magnifier closer to the object and closer to your eye!

WHY? The stronger the power, the more enlarged the viewed object becomes, but the field of view is decreased. You can only see a few letters at a time, therefore requiring you to move the magnifier or object more.

The cost of magnifiers will vary.

WHY? The type of magnifier, the material the lens is made of, the quality of the lens, and the manufacturer will contribute to the cost. Typically illuminated magnifiers will cost more than non-illuminated magnifiers. German made magnifiers, which offer superior quality optics, will cost more. Many of the better optical quality magnifiers will come with a warranty.

You cannot harm your eyes by using a magnifier.

Determining the proper magnifier requires patience, hands on practice and proper usage instructions.

Use the above chart to determine approximately the amount of magnification you need to read with. The last line (critical) is the same size print of the small print in a newspaper article. The line that you can best read is approximately the amount of magnification needed in a magnifier. The higher the magnification power, the closer you must hold the magnifier to your eye. For example, using a 10x magnifier, you would hold the magnifier approximately one inch from the paper and two inches from your eye.
